154 ROBERT

The Ioviani and Herculiani were not and Maximian, and are thus parallel legions, the Solenses and Martenses, which were the gods of Diocletian's two junior colleagues. Diocletian, like Septimius Severus, was not committed to frontier defense but he used the same argument to give name, the Dianenses, which he thought they were, as it happens, but for another not from the goddess directly, but from the Via Egnatia, where they must have been typical of the hinterland garrisons. The same is true of another unit (the Crispiani, which Jones twice calls "confusingly thinking of Crispus Caesar, who died later derived from Crispiana, a station near Carnuntum. This is one of eleven, two others of which also contribute to the Antianenses, and Cimbrianis the ... Roman unit titles can be
